CARTER SAYS WOULD TRAVEL TO NORTH KOREA

I Former president Jimmy Carter said he would be willing to travel to North Korea on behalf of the Trump administration to help diffuse rising tensions, The New York Times reported on its website. "I would go, yes," Carter, 93, told the Times when he was asked in an interview whether it was time for another diplomatic mission and whether he would do so for President Trump. Carter, said he had spoken to Trump's National Security Adviser Lt.-Gen. H. R. McMaster, who is a friend, but so far has gotten a negative response. "I told him that I was available if they ever need me," the Times quoted Carter as saying. Told that some in Washington were made nervous by Trump and North Korean leader Kim Jong Un's war of words, Carter said "I'm afraid, too, of a situation."

MCCONNELL: WHAT DOES TRUMP WANT?

2 Senate Republican leader Mitch McConnell said on Sunday he was willing to bring healthcare legislation up for a vote but was waiting for the go-ahead from President Donald Trump, who sent mixed signals last week about a bipartisan bill that would shore up insurance markets. Senate Republican leader Mitch McConnell said on Sunday he was willing to bring healthcare legislation up for a vote but was waiting for the go-ahead from President Donald Trump, who sent mixed signals last week about a bipartisan bill that would shore up insurance markets. That legislation, introduced by Republican Sen. Lamar Alexander and Democratic Sen. Patty Murray, has drawn support from several Republican senators. Asked if he would put it up for a vote this week, McConnell, the Senate majority leader, punted to Trump.

WARNING OF ATTACKS ON ENERGY INDUSTRIAL FIRMS

4 The U.S. government issued a rare public warning that sophisticated hackers are targeting energy and industrial firms, the latest sign that cyber attacks present an increasing threat to the power industry and other public infrastructure. The Department of Homeland Security and the FBI warned in a report distributed by email that the nuclear, energy, aviation, water and critical manufacturing industries have been targeted along with government entities in attacks dating back to at least May. The agencies warned that hackers had succeeded in compromising some targeted networks, but did not identify specific. The objective of the attackers is to compromise organizational networks with malicious emails and tainted websites to obtain credentials for accessing computer networks of their targets, the report said.

TITANIC VICTIM'S LETTER SELLS FOR RECORD $166K

5 A personal letter found on the body of a man killed in the sinking of the Titanic sold at auction for $166,000, a record price for correspondence from the doomed liner. The letter is one of the last known to have survived the sinking and still carries stains from its time in the Atlantic. Written by first-class passenger Alexander Oskar Holverson on embossed Titanic "on-board" stationery, the letter to his mother describes his impressions of the palatial ship, praising the food and music. "If all goes well we will arrive in New York Wednesday A.M.," Holverson wrote the day before the ship's fateful encounter with an iceberg. Holverson was a Minnesota-born salesman, who was traveling on the ship with his wife, Mary Alice, who survived the sinking.

Numbers show gun control laws are working

In states with stricter gun laws, fewer people are dying.

ERIN TIERNAN
@ErinTiernan
erin.tiernan@metro.us

It's a familiar narrative by now: A mass shooting shocks the nation, gun control proponents stand on their soapboxes, pro-Second Amendment groups cry about politicizing tragedy, and nothing seems to really happen.

With little federal action on gun control, the laws managing access to firearms have largely been left up to the states to decide, and unsurprisingly, it's meant states with Democratic leadership have stricter laws while Republican-led states have much laxer laws.

And despite the echo of claims that gun laws don't work, if the numbers are to be believed, that just isn't true.

The case for gun control

In 2015, the latest year for which the Centers for Disease Control has data on gun deaths, the list of states with the lowest rate of deaths per 100,000 residents reads like a who's who list of gun control efforts.

Massachusetts, with a rate of 3, had the lowest in the nation, followed by Hawaii with 3.6, New York with 4.2, Rhode Island with 4.7 and Connecticut with 5.3. New Jersey, Minnesota, California, Iowa and Nebraska rounded out the top 10.

All but two of the states (Iowa and Nebraska) are considered to have some of the strictest gun laws in the nation by the Law Center to Prevent Gun Violence, which ranks states annually. States with strict gun laws generally require background checks, waiting periods before purchase, place limits on the number of guns a person can own and ban assault weapons.

Conversely, the states with the highest death rates have some of the loosest gun laws.

But John Lott, president of the pro-Second Amendment Crime Prevention Research Center, says these statistics are a kind of feel-good data sets that should rely on a whole host of other information, like culture, demographics and rural/urban makeup that isn't factored in.

"[The gun death rates] are low despite the strict gun control laws, not because of them," he said.

It's an argument gun-owning activist John Rosenthal has heard before. He's after common-sense gun laws and he points to Massachusetts as the perfect example of why gun control laws work.

When Rosenthal launched hit nonprofit Stop Handgun Violence in 1994, that gun death rate in Massachusetts was about 7.5. Through a series of targeted gun control bills, that number has dropped by 60 percent over the last two decades.

"It's indisputable that gun laws save lives, we, Massachusetts, are an urban state and we have the lowest rate of gun deaths per 100,000 population and the most effective gun laws in the nation," he said.

Gun control laws and mass shootings

When it comes to mass shootings, widely defined as public shootings where four or more people are killed, the data is a little less clear.

The frequency of mass shootings in the United States is about on par with that of the '80s and '90s, but they're getting deadlier.

Rosenthal argues universal background checks and federal bans on assault weapons and large capacity ammunition magazines — the weapon of choice in most mass shootings — could help.

"We just want to make it harder for criminals, the dangerously mentally ill and even al-Qaida to buy guns," he said.

Firearm homicide rates are higher in states with lax concealed carry laws: Study

Self-defense has often been the explanation behind allowing gun ownership, especially when it comes to concealed carry. But do concealed carry laws actually make citizens safer?

No, according to a recent study from the Boston University School of Public Health.

States with "shall-issue" laws have higher homicide rates than those with "may-issue" laws, the study found, specifically when it comes to firearm and handgun homicide.

"Shall-issue" laws, present in 29 states, have little or no discretion for issuing permits, and a permit must be issued if the applicant meets the base requirements.

Nine states have "may-issue" laws, where local law enforcement has strict discretion over whether or not to issue concealed carry permits and can deny permits even if the applicant has no criminal history. (In 12 states, no permit is required to carry a concealed handgun.)

Shall-issue laws were associated with 6.5 percent higher total homicide rates, 8.6 percent higher firearm homicide rates, and 10.6 percent higher handgun homicide rates, according to the study, published Thursday in the American Journal of Public Health.

Physician and BU professor Michael Siegel and his team of researchers compared homicide rates in may-issue and shall-issue states using data from 1991 to 2015.

"I think this is really a critical research question because it has such implications for what we do about it," Siegel said. "The question of whether or not having more concealed gun carries makes us safer or less safe is important because it leads to opposite policy implications."

HOMICIDE RATES

Previous research on that question was conflicting, Siegel said: Some studies said more lenient concealed-carry laws increased crime rates, others said they lowered crime rates and many said there was no effect.

"We wanted to try to resolve this," he said. "We noticed a lot of the existing studies were written many years ago, with data from the '70s and '80s. We wanted to take a fresh look at it in more modern times. [Our data set] brought us up to the current time, or the most recent data available."

Siegel doesn't think those previous studies were wrong but believes that the relationship between shall-issue laws and homicide rates has changed.

"If there was increase in both firearm homicide and non-firearm homicide, that would really cast doubt on our findings, because why would more concealed carry permits affect non-firearm homicide rates?" he said. "The fact that we found that the impact on homicide was specific to just firearm homicide and also specific to handgun homicide — not long-gun, because concealed weapons obviously are all handguns — I think that adds validity to our findings."

Boston among the 'rattiest' cities in the US

Old, port cities tend to draw vermin because of abandoned sewer and water lines that make life grand for rats and mice.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Autumn is many people's favorite season, but fall isn't just about picturesque pumpkin patches, apple cider and cozy sweaters—it's also a time for rat infestations.

With the change in temperature comes an increase in vermin invasions, according to Orkin. The pest control company recently released a report detailing in which cities they do the most rodent treatments.

The report lists the "top 50 rattiest cities," based on how many commercial and residential rodent treatments Orkin performed between Sept. 15, 2016 and Sept. 15, 2017.

Though many think of New York City when they first think of rats, it actually came in second on the list behind Chicago—which has topped the Orkin ranking for the last three years, according to the company.

Although Boston has a neighborhood many call "Allston Rat City," the Hub didn't make the top 10, coming in at No. 15 out of 50 cities.

Each year, more than 20 million rodents invade homes across the country, according to the National Pest Management Association. Rats are particularly good at sneaking inside your home, experts say, because they can squeeze through a hole the size of a quarter or even chew their way inside.

"Rodents can be active year-round, but we're going to see more activity in the fall and the winter months when those temps start dropping on the outside," Hartzer said. "Those rodents are going to look for something a little bit warmer, or an extra food source they may not have outside anymore because of those cooler temperatures."

In the Governing magazine report, Boston came in second for home rodent sightings with 16.9 percent of households reporting seeing a rat or mouse, but William "Buddy" Christopher, commissioner for the city's Inspectional Services, doesn't think that Boston's rat population has really grown in the last four or five years. Still, Boston's old infrastructure contributes to the problem.

"If you look at that [Orkin] list, you see that the oldest cities are the ones that seem to have the biggest problems," he said. "We have a lot of sewer lines and water lines that are abandoned but still buried, and they're a conduit for travel."

The rat problem is also something that's in all Boston neighborhoods, he said, but the city has education initiatives that make sure people are handling their trash correctly and filling any spaces in building foundations or between sidewalks and buildings.

"This is an ongoing battle," Christopher said. "We're trying to contain it so we minimize it, because there's a real gross factor with rats. Everybody cringes."

Celebrity Feuds You Almost Certainly Forgot About

Got beef? METRO

On Thursday night, Pink admitted to a long ago beef with Christina Aguilera. "She swung on me in a club," the 38-year-old admitted on "Watch What Happens Live with Andy Cohen." "It was hilarious. I was like, 'What is happening right now? What's happening?' I laughed, it was just funny."

With that charming memory in mind, we're looking at six delightfully inane celebrity feuds that you may have forgotten about. Enjoy!

Pink VS Christina Aguilera

The two apparently clashed toward the beginning of their music careers. "We were super young and super new at the whole thing," Pink explained. "We just were very different, and we were very young and new."

Chelsea Handler VS Angelina Jolie

Handler just so happens to be best friends with Jennifer Aniston. And she's made it her life's work to demonize Jolie, since the moment Aniston's ex, Brad Pitt, got together with her. "As a woman, I know when you see somebody walking across the room that's a bad girl," Handler said once on "Watch What Happens Live." "I just don't like Angelina Jolie. I don't think she's a girl's girl."

Hilary Duff VS Lindsay Lohan

If you can believe it, these two fought over Aaron Carter — yes, that Aaron Carter — circa 2003. It was the world's most tween-friendly love triangle to date.

Nicki Minaj VS Miley Cyrus

The 2015 MTV Video Music Awards were a simpler time. Nonetheless, they were a time where Cyrus publically called Minaj "not too kind" and "not very polite." Minaj, ever the one to not f—k with, gave us the "Miley, what's good?" heard around the world. Cyrus never did respond with what was good, so we can only imagine.

Shannen Doherty VS Alyssa Milano

The two former "Charmed" stars had a bunch of drama starring alongside each other on the witchy '90s series. When Doherty left in 2011, she shadily told "Entertainment Tonight" that "there was too much drama on the set and not enough passion for the work." Burn!

Martha Stewart VS Gwyneth Paltrow

These two women of privilege had a little disagreement over — of course — GOOP. "She just needs to be quiet," Stewart once said. "She's a movie star. If she were confident in her acting, she wouldn't be trying to be Martha Stewart." Afterwards, shade-master Stewart created a "Conscious Coupling" pie. Paltrow responded with a "Jailbird Cake" recipe. These ladies have too much time on their hands!

'The Walking Dead' takes it easy

Recounting the most shocking moments from last night's premiere.

RACHAEL VAUGHAN CLEMMONS
rachaeklemz@metro.us

Rick Grimes and his sweaty hair tendrils are back with a vengeance. With last night's very explosive heavy premiere of the eighth season of "The Walking Dead," we finally see the Alexandrians, Hilltop and The Kingdom come together against Negan and the Saviors. It's, as the comic book version promises, All Out War.

Last night's episode mostly served as a way to slowly reintroduce you to where the series left off and to remind you that these characters really love a monologue. All of them. And while this year's premiere had a far fewer twists and turns than last year's — rest in peace, Glenn and Abraham — there was still an tiny bit of drama to spare.

Here are the most shocking moments from the first episode of the season.

Introducing, Old Rick
Old Rick makes an appearance in what could be a flash forward or some sort of fantasy sequence — so far, it's hard to tell. But he's got a full beard and a cane because, you know, how else would you know he was old? Especially since flash-forward Judith has gotten older, but flash-forward Michonne appears to be the exact same age as she is in the present.

The reveal of Old Rick's awful haircut

While we're at it, we'd be remiss not to mention that Old Rick's brittle haircut can't hold a candle to the wet mess of curly sweat bangs Rick is presently rocking.

Yes, Maggie is still pregnant

Maggie is still reminding you, the audience, that despite having gestated through the last two seasons — despite not at all showing — she is definitely still pregnant. Because apparently in "The Walking Dead" time, it's only been a number of weeks. Plus, showrunner Scott M. Gimple confirmed that we shouldn't expect Maggie to give birth any time during the eighth season, so let's continue to suspend our disbelief.

As "Walking Dead" episodes go, this one is pretty standard.
AMC NETWORKS

Gregory ditches Father Gabriel

Gregory is a self-serving coward. Everyone knows that! But Father Gabriel is gonna Father Gabriel. And of course, when he tries to save Gregory, the former Hilltop leader ditches him and steals his getaway car. It's pretty rude, frankly.

Father Gabriel gets close to Negan

In an attempt to escape the walkers, Father Gabriel gets in the same trailer as Negan. What strange bedfellows these two will certainly make, huh? Their union also gives us a shocking, awful exchange. "I hope you've got your shittin' pants on," Negan says.

Gabriel, as confused as the rest of us asks simply, "What?" "Your shittin' pants," Negan answers. "I hope you're wearing 'em right now. Because you are about to shit your pants." Honestly, as a villain, how are people going to take you seriously when you talk literal nonsense? Consider it food for thought.

Scandi scares of 'The Snowman' will send chills down your spine

Rebecca Ferguson brings the cold to this winter thriller.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
@MetroBOS
gregory.wakeman@metro.us

The story behind the making of "The Snowman" is more interesting than the film itself — it was more than a decade in pre- and pre-pre- and pre-pre-pre-production. The Norwegian tale was released as a book in 2007. Martin Scorsese got his hands on it in 2013. A year later Swedish director Tomas Alfredson slid into the chair. Then Michael Fassbender came to the table. In 2015, Rebecca Ferguson joined the party. And today moviegoers can have the full, big-screen treatment of the ultra-creepy story.

Rebecca Ferguson as Katrine Bratt. UNIVERSAL

The fictional tale of Norway's first serial killer — who murders adulterous married mothers and leaves a snowman by each body as her/his calling card — is set in Oslo, and the city itself becomes the true stand-out movie star.

"I know that there were a lot of people interested in this book, and they were going to shoot it in America," says Ferguson. "When Tomas

[Alfredson] came in he said, 'We're not shooting it in Ohio. We're not shooting in Chicago. We're going to do it in Oslo. In the real environment. We want to feel the cold. We want to experience the real landscape of what Oslo has to offer.' And that made me so excited.

"Now that I've seen it I couldn't imagine another option," she continues. "This is so real and authentic to the story. It's very Scandi-noir. I'm just happy that it became a very local production."

"The Snowman" certainly looks and feels much different from your typical Hollywood thriller. We doubt there are enough snow machines in Los Angeles to give the chill of the Norwegian scenery, which is truly haunting and overwhelmingly stunning.

The two main characters in charge of the cold (brr) case investigations are Harry Hole, played by Fassbender, and Katrine Bratt, played by Ferguson. She says, "They're outcasts and are separated from the environment because they just need to solve cases. It's a beautiful relationship between them that's not sexual, which is something I find great in films."

"The Snowman" is in cinemas from October 20.

Arnold Schwarzenegger: Hitman, once again, in 'Killing Gunther'

And we just keep giving this guy a gun.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
@MetroBOS
gregory.wakeman@metro.us

Ever since his return to acting in 2011, Arnold Schwarzenegger has primarily focused on having fun with his roles. We see it in "The Last Stand," "Escape Plan," "Sabotage" and "Maggie," as well as his obligatory appearances in the "Terminator" franchise, and his enjoyment has been palpable — this is a guy who will only do what he likes, and audiences appreciate it.

In his latest film, "Killing Gunther," Schwarzenegger plays the titular

Schwarzenegger as hitman Gunther

character — the world's best hitman. But he only appears in the last half-hour of the 90ish-minute movie. For the first two-thirds we are treated to a cast of physical comedians who represent a posse bound to kill the famous assassin.

We asked Schwarzenegger how it felt to be talked about incessantly but not appear on screen until nearly the end. "When I read it what I liked about it is that you are waiting and waiting and waiting, and you're like, 'Who is this Gunther?' and then here I am," he says. "So the question was always, 'Am I not coming in too late in the movie? To me, it really works. All of a sudden you see Gunther and you can see why he is number one compared to these guys."

And once we're finally introduced to his character, we're treated to a bit of a serenade. Who knew the former governor of California was also an accomplished vocalist? "I tell you,"

he shares, "people always ask me, 'Is there anything in a movie that is embarrassing to you?' Like walking around naked in "Terminator" 1, 2, 3 ... or whatever number it is. I will always say singing. I hate singing because I am so bad."

"Gunther is a little bit full of himself, and he thinks he is going to create a big competition for the other singers," he continues. "That's the character. Me Arnold, though, it was painful to do that sh."

Imagine being embarrassed by belting a few bars when this film also serves up Arnie in lederhosen, a butterfly-encrusted blazer, cravats and ... drag.

"Killing Gunther" is in select theaters and On Demand from October 20.

Trump's attack on birth control coverage

We spoke to a representative from Planned Parenthood to see how this decision will impact women in the workplace.

PAT KING
@MetroBOS
patrick.king@metro.us

"We will not allow people of faith to be targeted, bullied or silenced anymore."

This proclamation was made by President Donald Trump earlier this year. A bold promise directed toward the god-fearing Republican base that was partly responsible for ushering him into the White House. On Friday, Oct. 6, he made good on this promise and announced that he would be rolling back one of President Obama's mandates protecting contraceptive coverage included in the Affordable Care Act (ACA). Under Trump's new plan, businesses will be able to opt out of providing coverage for birth control to female employees if the company believe it goes against their religious beliefs.

In a statement released by President of Planned Parenthood Federation of America Cecile Richards, she wrote, "This is an unacceptable attack on basic health care that the vast majority of women rely on. With this rule in place, any employer could decide that their employees no longer have health insurance coverage for birth control." So how exactly will this decision affect you if your employer chooses to take away coverage? I spoke with Lauren Cross, press office for Planned Parenthood, to see if she could shed some light on to how the rollback of this mandate will impact women in the workplace. "When it comes down to it, it's being called a religious rule but it doesn't have anything to do with religion," Cross says. "Previously even if an employer had a religious objection to birth control, the ACA would still ensure that employees would have birth control coverage through other means. What this specific rule does is that it eliminates that extra protection that was under the ACA for all companies."

Feds, 11 states crack down on student loan scams

We're not gonna take it anymore.

NerdWallet is a personal finance website.

Federal and state officials have launched the first national crackdown on companies that they say gouge student loan borrowers, accusing the companies of taking more than $95 million in illegal fees in recent years and falsely promising debt relief.

The Federal Trade Commission, 11 states and the District of Columbia announced they have filed 36 suits and other legal actions against companies accused of scamming student loan holders.

Prosecutors are targeting a growing number of companies that prey on desperate debtors among the 42 million Americans who've borrowed a total of more than $1.4 trillion.

Officials in Illinois alone said they are investigating more than 50 companies suspected of operating student loan debt relief scams.

Victimizing borrowers

The companies exploit borrowers by charging steep — and often illegal — upfront fees and recurring monthly amounts. Some of the scammers persuade borrowers to provide access to their loan accounts, then change their passwords and fail to keep payments current. As a result, borrowers' wages are garnished, tax refunds seized or Social Security benefits cut.

Aside from enforcement actions by a handful of state attorneys general, little was being done. Individual states often played Whac-A-Mole, as companies shuttered in one state continued operating in the other 49.

Before the federal-state crackdown, the FTC and the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau had closed just seven student "debt relief" companies, although more than 100 have operated in recent years.

Several states join fight
Of the 36 enforcement actions in the crackdown, seven are by the FTC and 13 are by the attorney general's office in Washington, the state most aggressively pursuing fraudulent student loan companies. The crackdown includes five new FTC cases, a new judgment in the agency's favor and a preliminary injunction in a case filed

The FTC has filed five new cases against 30 defendants. For example, the agency charged that Los Angeles-based A1 DocPrep Inc. took at least $6 million from consumers through student loan and mortgage relief schemes.

The agency charged that another Los Angeles-based group of companies bilked at least $7.3 million from struggling student loan holders. Student Debt Doctor, of Fort Lauderdale, Florida, and its owner collected at least $7 million from consumers, charging illegal upfront fees of $750 or more, the FTC alleged.

Federal courts have backed the FTC in some cases. The U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Florida froze assets of Strategic Student Solutions, a company accused of taking more than $11 million from consumers by falsely promising to reduce student loan debt and to repair customers' credit.

The operation includes law enforcement actions by states that have been aggressive in the past, such as Illinois, Washington, Florida and Oregon. Others taking part in the sweep are Colorado, Kansas, Maryland, North Carolina, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, Texas and the District of Columbia.

IS 'EDGY KYRIE' THE RIGHT FIT FOR BOSTON?

Matt Burke is the Executive Sports Editor and a columnist at Metro US.

Follow him on Twitter
@burke_metro

A big part of what makes Kyrie Irving so good is that he's got a definite edge to him.

He's the only guy in the past 14 years to stand up to LeBron and tell him to go screw. When he asked for a trade out of Cleveland, he was basically telling LeBron, "I'm not sticking around here to put up with a year of your 'will I stay or will I go?' drama. I'm not sticking around here to put up with more of your passive aggressive B.S. I want my own team and I want to go toe-to-toe with the alleged 'King.'"

Kyrie got his first shot at LeBron last Tuesday night, but the Celtics lost, 102-99. The Gordon Hayward injury altered the tone of the game dramatically, but Kyrie and the Celtics put up a good fight — even taking the lead at one point in the fourth quarter. Kyrie scored 22 points on 8-of-17 shooting in that one.

In Kyrie's second game as a Celtic, he put up eight more shots than he put up the previous night and scored just 17 points on 7-of-25 shooting against Milwaukee. He was asked after the game about his ugly shooting night and he responded by saying, "gotta get 'em up," in reference to his 25 shot attempts. That got a collective eye-roll from

Kyrie Irving is the new face of the Boston Celtics as he looks to shed his identity as LeBron James' wingman in Cleveland. Will he be able to pull it off? GETTY IMAGES most Celtics fans.

On Friday night in Philly — a 102-92 Celtics win — Kyrie put up 17 shots from the floor, making seven. He finished with 21 points. Good night, not great.

Kyrie is averaging 20 points per game, good for 27th in the NBA. With expectations that he would be in the mix for an NBA scoring crown this season, so far the Celtics' new star has been mostly underwhelming.

In addition to his slightly-below-average play so far, Kyrie has also already offered up some odd incidents.

In the home loss to Milwaukee, he went into the tunnel to the locker room for 10-plus minutes in the first half. Later that game, with Kyrie pounding the basketball and the offense looking completely out of sorts — typically reserved head coach Brad Stevens threw himself violently into his chair on the bench, shaking his head. In the locker room after the game, Stevens told his team

What's on tap?

The Celtics will sport a 1-2 record heading into Tuesday night's game against Kristaps Porzingis and the Knicks (0-2) at TD Garden (7:30 p.m., NBCSB).

The C's will then get their second shot of the season at Giannis Antetokounmpo and the Bucks on Thursday in a national TV game (8 p.m., TNT).

Boston will close out the week in Miami against the Heat (1-1) on Saturday (8 p.m., NBCSB).

that "if you don't learn the plays, you won't play."

It's highly speculative to suggest Stevens was talking about Kyrie, but that's absolutely something worth monitoring. Kyrie noticeably passed up shots against Philly on Friday night, so it's possible he's already taking Stevens' cues.

Also in Philly on Friday, a Sixers fan yelled at Kyrie in the tunnel,

"Kyrie, where's LeBron!?" Kyrie responded with a quick, "S-- my d--!"

No harm, no foul there — in fact, it's pretty funny, and Boston fans can get on board with a little trash talk toward a Philly fan any day. But, is it fair to start expecting this sort of thing from our new basketball hero?

There was this little thing, too, in the pre-season. During training camp, Kyrie was 45 minutes late for a meeting with Stevens because he had car trouble.

Again, no biggie. Everyone has car issues now and again. But just another thing to keep in mind in case there's more weird Kyrie stuff going forward.

One thing is for certain, this season is going to be interesting as all hell with Kyrie running the show.

Will he be able to handle the cynical Boston fans when he has more shooting night clunkers like he had the other night? Will Celtics fans be OK with the up-and-down nature of Kyrie's play? (Last season with the Cavs he had a 3-for-17 shooting night one night against Philly, and later that year had a 49-point explosion against New Orleans.)

Will there be a struggle between Kyrie and Stevens, the perfectionist?

As we all know by now about Boston, win and all is forgiven.

"Edgy Kyrie" can still own this town, so long as the Celtics start to rack up some W's.

Red Sox make Cora their next manager

The Astros assistant coach will join Boston after the World Series concludes.

MATT BURKE
@burke_metro
matthew.burke@metro.us

The Red Sox made it official on Sunday, hiring Alex Cora as the 47th manager in franchise history.

Cora is currently serving as the bench coach for the Houston Astros, who beat the Yankees Saturday night to advance to the World Series against the Dodgers. He will be formally introduced as Red Sox manager following the conclusion of the World Series.

The 42-year-old Cora played for the Red Sox under Terry Francona from 2005-08 and was a member of the Sox' 2007 World Series championship team.

"I am extremely honored and humbled to be named manager of the Boston Red Sox and I want to thank Dave [Dombrowski], John Henry, Tom Werner and Sam Kennedy for giving me such a tremendous opportunity," said Cora. "Returning to the Red Sox and the city of Boston is a dream come true for me and my family and I look forward to working towards the ultimate goal of winning another championship for this city and its great fans. At the same time, I want to express my appreciation for Jim Crane, Jeff Luhnow, AJ Hinch and the entire Houston Astros organization for giving me the chance to start my coaching career. It has been a very special season and an incredible organization to be a part of and I am looking forward to the World Series and winning with this group."

Dombrowski targeted Cora early in a managerial search that lasted less than two weeks.

"We were very impressed when we interviewed Alex," Dombrowski said. "He came to us as a highly regarded candidate and from speaking with him throughout this process we found him to be very knowledgeable, driven, and deserving of this opportunity. He is a highly respected and hardworking individual who has experience playing in Boston. Alex also has a full appreciation for the use of analytical information in today's game and his ability to communicate and relate to both young players and veterans is a plus. Finally, the fact that he is bilingual is very significant for our club."

The native of Puerto Rico becomes the first Red Sox manager to have played for the Red Sox since Butch Hobson, who managed the Sox from 1992-94.

Cora has only been coaching since November of last year as in his initial years of retirement from playing he was an ESPN baseball analyst.

Cora played in the majors from 1998-2011, spending time with the Dodgers, Indians, Mets, Rangers and Nationals in addition to the Red Sox.

Aries Add to your qualifications. Learn, explore and figure out the best way to move forward. Make today the beginning of a new adventure. Personal gain is within reach.

Taurus Take care of your financial and domestic affairs personally. Someone you think you can trust may feel entitled to abuse a privilege you have offered in the past.

Gemini Question your motives. You may get more than you bargained for if your intent isn't made clear to everyone you are dealing with. Physical fitness will ease your stress.

Cancer Be brave and explore what life has to offer. Do things differently and you'll surprise and please the people you care about most. Let your creative imagination lead the way.

Leo Don't let changes at work or at home get to you. Deal with your responsibilities and move on to the things you enjoy doing. A personal improvement will lift your spirits.

Virgo Communication will be your ticket to positive change. Stick to the truth and explicitly lay out your plans. Tell anyone who balks that they are welcome to take a pass.

Libra Make up your mind and stick to your plans. Take care of your health and walk away from discord. Physical improvements will boost your confidence.

Scorpio Guard against impulsive and unpredictable people pressuring you to follow them. Create the life you want, instead of accepting what someone pushes on you.

Sagittarius Embellishing a story or making fun of someone will invite criticism and create emotional distress. If you offer kindness you'll be praised, not chastised.

Capricorn Learn from experience when dealing with emotional matters. You are best off not making changes without getting the necessary approval first.

Aquarius Less talk will help to alleviate conflict. Hard work will pay off and leave no room for criticism. A professional change looks promising.

Pisces Stay on top of sensitive situations. Using intelligence will help you dodge a problem, leaving you more time to focus on creative pursuits. EUGENIA LAST
